Nederlandse digitale archieven blijken nauwelijks bruikbaar

BINNENLAND De digitalisering van historische boeken, tijdschriften en archieven in Nederland is ondermaats. Daardoor zijn gedigitaliseerde documenten niet of nauwelijks bruikbaar als wetenschappelijke bronnen.

door Pim van den Dool

Dit blijkt uit een rondgang van NRC-redacteur Karel Berkhout langs erfgoedinstellingen en wetenschappers. „Veel is moeilijk vindbaar en nauwelijks doorzoekbaar”, zegt directeur Marco de Niet van Digitaal Erfgoed Nederland, dat het Rijk adviseert. Dat komt onder meer door de gebrekkige manier waarop de documenten na het scannen leesbaar worden gemaakt voor de computer.

Requirements for shared canvas cooperation

This is a message for libraries that digitise and publishers

- Provide metadata open and free
- Publish for machines: Data (RDF linked data)
- Create stable, durable links: Persistent URI's

What Shared Canvas is doing in the meantime

- Work on new standards (W3C) using open annotation collaboration
- Stanford is preparing a kick start package to experiment
- A meeting in the Netherlands about the image side including KB, British Library, BNF, Stanford, LANL, UK National Archives, National Library of Norway and the BodleianLibrary.

What Ghent University library is trying to do

- Provide metadata Open & Free ... and digitised material in Creative Commons
- Publish for machines: Data (RDF linked data) ...
- Act as a go-between and tease the researcher, helping to find the logistics

What Ghent University library is doing

- Google Books partner: 300.000 books before 1871
- Added the Google Books to Europeana
- Digitise our own cultural heritage collection and put it in creative commons

How we fit in the Fiesole program

- Long term goal?
 - Definitely! A used collection by mainly researchers and students
- Our organisational model?
 - We are an enthusiastic Google Books partner
 - We have a splendid collection, a strong European network, a great team, a clever equipment, some skills, some money and we just do it
